Munich, October 10.

THE Prince of Saxe Hilburghauſen, who commands the Bavarian Corps yielded to the Maritime Powers, is ſet out from hence for the Netherlands, and the laſt Diviſion of our Troops began their March from Donawert on the 5th Inſtant. We learn from Italy, that the King of Sardinia is marched towards Nice, his own Troops having been reinforced by a Body of Auſtrians.

Hambourg, Oct. 14, N. S. The Marquis Des Iſſarts having taken the Character of Ambaſſador Extraordinary from France to the Court of Poland, was to have his Audience of the King, Queen, and Royal Family, at Warſaw, on the 1ſt Inſtant.

Hague, Oct. 11, N. S. By good Letters from Italy we learn, that the King of Sardinia was upon the 24th paſt at Oneglia; that ſome of his Troops had taken Poſſeſſion of St. Remo; and that his Vanguard was then advanced near Ventimiglia.

Hague, Oct. 14, N. S. We have not yet been able to procure exact Liſts of the Killed and Wounded, whether of the Dutch, or the few Regiments of other Nations that were engaged in the Action of the 11th near Liege. On the Enemy's Side, M. de Fenelon, the late French Ambaſſador here, is ſaid to be amongſt the former.

Hague, Oct. 18, N. S. The French ſeem to have reaped no conſiderable Advantage from the Action of the 11th, having marched back to their old Camp near Tongeren, without ſo much as taking Poſſeſſion of Liege. One of Marſhal Saxe's Deſigns in this Attack, was, to have turned our Right, and intercepted our Communication with Maeſtricht. It is generally reported here, that he has detached about 20 Battalions, and as many Squadrons, to the Coaſt of Britany, and was upon the Point of putting the reſt of his Army into Winter Quarters. Some private Letters from Paris of the 14th give an Account, that the Engliſh Troops upon the Coaſt of Britany were reimbarked; others mention their being ſtill upon Land, and that they had propoſed to have reimbarked upon the 9th, but being prevented by contrary Winds, had intrenched themſelves againſt the Gardes Cotes and the Peaſants. Theſe Letters ſay, that the Engliſh had not entered l'Orient at all, but had plundered all the Villages thereabouts. The Account publiſhed by the French Court of the Deſcent in Britany, is as follows:

Upon the 10th two Couriers arrived from Britany, with an Account, that the Engliſh Troops which had made a Deſcent near l'Orient, reimbarked upon the 7th at Night, having firſt pillaged four Villages, ſome Cottages and Farms, from whence they took all the Proviſions they could meet with. They left behind them four Pieces of Cannon and one Mortar, which they could not carry off, finding themſelves preſſed by the Militia of the Province. It is to be feared that this Fleet, having revictualled in this Deſcent, may make another elſewhere, or bombard ſome Towns where no Defence can be made.

By other Accounts from Paris we have Advice, that the French King had publiſhed a general Order for impriſoning all the Engliſh Subjects in that Kingdom who were not provided with Paſſports, and that ſome Engliſh Gentlemen had been thereupon ſeized and committed to the Baſtile. On the 30th of laſt Month the King of Sardinia lay at Bordilera, within a League of Ventimiglia. His Troops had poſſeſſed themſelves of Dolce Acqua, but expected
